1. Open the San Francisco map image in Photoshop. You can find the map image file in the folder where you saved the tutorial. I find this file in my Documents folder on my MacBook Pro, as shown in Figure 6-1. 2. Create a new image in Photoshop. On the New Image window's drop-down menu, choose Standard Color. You should see 8-bit RGB and 256 colors. 3. Type the word _San Francisco_ in the New Document window. I use the type tool (T) with the font I'm using, Calibri. After you have the type tool selected, click to place the type, and then release the mouse button. 4. Resize the image to 400 x 200 pixels. You may be wondering why I chose a size of 400 x 200 pixels. Well, you want to be able to fit your new photo in the empty space. Using the Transform commands (Ctrl+T or Cmd+T) enables you to drag one corner of the image to resize it. 5. Copy the San Francisco map image. On the Edit menu, choose Copy. Make sure that the Shift key is depressed as you click. FIGURE 6-1: You may find this image in your main image folder, if you've saved the tutorial. 6. Open the San Francisco map image. Click on the Open button to open the image file and place it on the screen. 7. Select the San Francisco map image. Hold the Ctrl (Option) key down and click on the San Francisco map image to select it. 8. Click the Edit icon, which bears the letter E, in the Layers panel, as shown in the margin. The resulting image looks like the one in Figure 6-2. 9. Click the Convert to Smart Object button. This action creates a new Smart Object. 10. Click on the Convert button. The old image will remain on the screen, but the bottom layer of the new Smart Object will be filled with your image. Now, you see only the layers inside the Smart Object. Notice that as you hold down the Ctrl (Option) key, you can then control the Smart Object. You can see an example of this functionality

HPRT, BALB/c myeloma cells, clone MOPC-315, did not survive in the ascites fluid of athymic mice. Ascites fluid from athymic mice immunized with syngeneic BALB/c myeloma cells (clone MOPC-315) suppressed the in vitro growth of syngeneic myeloma cells. This growth suppression was due to interferon that was produced by the myeloma cells as evidenced by the stability of the suppression in dialysed ascites fluids. All ascites fluid and Ficoll-Hypaque fractions from BALB/c mice immunized with syngeneic cells or ascites fluid from BALB/c mice immunized with the syngeneic and allogeneic cells also suppressed the in vitro growth of syngeneic myeloma cells in the mouse. This growth suppression was not blocked by polyclonal sera that are reactive with Ficoll-Hypaque fractions or by dialysed ascites fluids of BALB/c mice immunized with allogeneic cells. We conclude that the growth suppression by ascites fluid is due to interferon produced by the ascites myeloma cells and that the growth suppression is not restricted by major histocompatibility complex or by cell-specific alloantigens. As a senior manager, you are required to set up a meeting with a customer who has an issue with your company. Meeting is set up for you to provide a solution to their issue. The product is not in the best interests of the customer. Your job is to find a way to make them think the product is the answer to all their issues. Time passes and you talk to your director to let him know you failed in your job. The product that you presented was not the answer the client was looking for. The director decides you should go to the CEO to tell him the bad news. The director calls you into the CEO's office and says, "I had a meeting with our client. He explained that you didn't come up with a good solution to their problems. We are going to terminate our relationship with them. What do you have to say about that?" "Sir, I did everything you asked. I set up the meeting, I presented the solution, and it was a bad one. I don't understand why you want to terminate our agreement." "It's quite simple

Effects of low-cost selective breeding on morphological and behavioral traits of the olive fly Bactrocera oleae. This study had two main goals: (i) to develop an assessment procedure for commercial olive plantations based on olive fly (Bactrocera oleae) abundance, and (ii) to analyze the population genetic structure of the fly using multilocus genotyping. This approach facilitates genetic management of olive oil plants based on low-cost and non-destructive assessments. A sample of two-year-old olive trees was collected to create a representative sampling of olive fly abundance (n = 1,106 trees) and intensity of infestation (n = 302 trees). Pairwise correlations were calculated to select the most representative traits. Bayesian estimation of the most likely number of clusters was performed using STRUCTURE HARVESTER with correlated allele frequencies. Gene frequencies, allelic frequencies, and the frequency of occurrence of alternative alleles at each locus (AFLP, ISSR and RAPDs) were determined. Correlations showed that the olive fly population abundance is mainly influenced by infestation severity, trunk size, and olive size. There was no correlation between phenotypic traits and tree height. When we compared genetically differentiated and non-differentiated populations, we found three genetic clusters. The first cluster included the three populations in the center of the distribution, while the last two clusters included the two olive fly populations situated on the west coast. In conclusion, we have developed a procedure to assess the number of olive oil plantations based on their olive fly population density. We also report for the first time the status of olive fly populations based on molecular markers.Q: Multiple dlls are referencing the same assembly When I run a C# application that has multiple DLLs referencing a 3rd party DLL I get the following error Error 18 The assembly specified was not found. The 3rd party dll contains a configuration file which references another dll and this dll references another dll. So in this case A: One of the referenced assemblies is not found (that is why you get the exception in the first place). Q: How would I get a Raspberry Pi to run one script after another? I have a raspberry pi (it's a pretty old one, 2gb ram, 2gb sd card, but is perfect for the purposes of this).
