PC with product key 5105-2577 and 30 days of technical support.Q: Bash shell script with dynamic character concatenation I am fairly new to bash programming, and I am trying to create a shell script to feed off an Oracle table "customer" to create a script for modifying it. The problem I am facing is that I need to build in some sort of "" wildcard to allow for a variable number of replacement characters. I cannot use the built in replacements of bash, and must keep as much of the Oracle DDL language as I can. Basically, what I would need to do is the following: = .? And for the following: . = I have attempted to use the printf command to concatenate the characters, and simply replace them in the SOURCE. It works, but it is slow in that I need to create a whole list of replacements (I have created 30 so far, but expect more). The below code is an attempt to make it a little more dynamic: STR=`printf "${2}" | sed -e's/\|\'/g'` N=1 # Make sure they have a PROMPT while read -r LINE; do FIELD="${LINE#}." NAME=${LINE%%.}.${FIELD} # The correct format for the to be replaced. REPLACEMENT="*" # Try to replace the wrong characters # using a loop, as it may take a while if the character is * for VAR in ${VARIABLES}; do STR=`printf "${2}" | sed -e's/\|\'/g'` REPLACEMENT="${VAR%$STR}" INVAR="${STR}${VAR}" # Confirm they have the correct format
